A thousand laborers are placing twenty tons of dynamite preparatory to blowing up the dyke.

The day it is destroyed will be a memorable one in the history of the canal, and Americans should realize that this is one of the few remaining finishing touches to the completion of the canal. Colonel Goethals can send a vessel through in less than a month. The colonel's forces will advance upon Miraflores Locks from either side of the canal, and will open fire upon the obstruction. rated in the rear of the Cucharacha Slide.

Colonel Goethals has established a battery of monitors, which will hurl a rain of eight-inch streams, having a pressure of fifty pounds to the square inch, against the base of the slides. By this he calculates to reduce the mountain rock to a soft mud, which may be sluiced off to the lowlands. The effect will be to reduce the pressure on the slide and cause it to crumble. By front and rear attacks of this character it, is but a matter of days until the last remaining obstruction is broken away, and which now prevents the canalirom linking ocean and ocean. Visitors are rushing in. The scenes along the Canal Zone resemble those of the final charge of an army against its foe. On the morning of October 5 the dredges will be floated through the Gatun Lake. On Friday the mine will be exploded under the dike and the channel, where the dike stood. Meanwhile the dredges to the south will be waiting word when the waters shall have swelled through the trenches.
